REPORT OF SCHOOL BOARD.

The annual meeting of the School district was held March 8, 1897. Mr. J. H. Goodrich was elected a member of the Board of Education for two years; Rev. Owen E. Hardy was elected a member for three years, and also treasurer. Board organized March 12, J. H. Goodrich, chairman; O. E. Hardy, treasurer; A. F. Cram, secretary, and to have the care of supplies.

Whole number of pupils registered,	107
Number of teachers employed,	7
Number residents of Lyndeboro,	1
Number of schools,	5
Average weeks of school,	26.2

Miss Agnes C. Curtis was the only resident teacher employed. She undertook her work under some difficulties, but resolutely met them and succeeded in making a very profitable term of school for No. 2. Miss Eva M. Bugbee taught the fall term, and though inexperienced, did equally good work and with experience gives promise of a marked success. The school in No. 1 was taught through the year by Miss Imogene E. Edmands of Wakefield, Mass. Miss Edmands was thoroughly qualified to use the new methods and proved their desirability for country ungraded schools. She was popular among the pupils. Miss Clintina E. Curtis taught the three terms at the village with her customary vigor and qualification. She is a natural teacher and we commend her heartily. No. 6 was taught by Miss Elsie B. Curtis of Wilton, and gave such satisfaction that she was asked by the parents to return another year. That is right, too. Wish we had more of it. Miss Harrington, who had taught so successfully in No. 9 the former year, was secured again for the spring term and gave the usual satisfaction. Miss Alice F. Herlihy of Wilton succeeded her for fall term and was in every way as equally successful. She is a thorough and popular teacher.

To accurately estimate the actual work done any one year in our schools as compared with others, is well nigh an impossible task. But this much can be safely said of them this year: That, altogether, they have been more satisfactory than they were the year before. The actual work accomplished, as a whole, was more thorough and efficient. The teachers were interested and worked diligently and faithfully, without exception. As far as it was in our power to secure them, teachers competent to fill their positions were employed. Our text books and the general equipment for the teacher's and the pupil's work have been improved and are more up to date. But in this respect we have only fairly begun, much more is needed. Parents have co-operated with less hesitancy than hitherto.

Now this is not saying that we have attained a very high ideal, as yet. It only means that we have made some progress. In order to reach a very high ideal much is required of our citizens in interest, co-operation and self sacrifice.

It may be pertinent to the question to make a few remarks on the actual prevailing condition. There is a reprehensible attitude toward our schools among those who should be their most loyal supporters. Every now and then we hear them in conversation and before school children talking to the effect that the schools are a failure. They do not become reconciled to the new methods of teaching, and dwell with glowing colors upon the greater efficiency of the schools of their childhood. But it is to be noted that these critics never visit the school to see with their own eyes what is being done, except with rare exceptions they attend a few hours of the afternoon of the last day, at which time no one is capable of forming a fair opinion as to what is really done. Those who visit our schools most complain the least. Besides, our town has not given the new methods a fair trial. People are unwilling to go to the expense, and are lacking in patience to wait for the system to get adjusted. In order to be successful in them teachers must be employed, trained to instruct by them. Every teacher ought to have some kind of Normal training. One reason why the system has aroused the suspicion of fair minded men is because teachers have been employed who have not been qualified to instruct by them. Then the new methods require a different set of tools for the teacher to work with, and text books adapted to their use. What farmer would wish to cut his grass by the old way, or use the same farming tools as those used by his fathers?

If the actual results, however, are on trial and to be estimated in comparison with that golden era of the past to which these critics allude, let it be done. We believe that our schools are doing as much, to say the least, now as then. We believe that our children are receiving as thorough instruction in our schools as they ever did in proportion to the interest taken in them by parents, and the willingness with which they are ready to co-operate. One of the most disgusting features of the management of school affairs is the high charges that citizens make for services or supplies. Often it happens we can hire the same work done for less from out of town.

The consolidation of schools has proved that it is along the right line. What is the principle that should govern here? Plainly two things should be kept in view. One is pecuniary, the other is efficiency. Putting both together we may say: do that which will give the best results with the least cost. Whenever it is plain that we can educate children with less cost and with better results by transference to another district, then they should be conveyed without more ado. This has been already done to a limited extent but not to what it should, owing to prejudice.

Something should be done in No. 3 to grade the school. As long as the present condition there prevails, with the very best of teachers, more or less dissatisfaction must be evident. Let the citizens get together to consider the matter in a generous and patriotic spirit, and the problem will be easily solved.

It is also hoped that the schoolhouse in No. 9 can be removed to a position to accommodate more than where it now stands. Without doubt, henceforth Nos. 5 and 9 will have to go together, making the wisdom of the course imperative.

Respectfully submitted,

OWEN E. HARDY.
